An account of the Esquemaux from a statment of

Walter Smyth

who was cast away on the East cape of Siberia Septem th 22: 1852 in the ship Citizen of N. B—they live mostly on walrus & seal & birds & Elk som eat of the bluber of whales the oil is for cooking & burning in winter-& feeding their dogs the which is their chief animals of burden & labour the native dress in thick fur well tanned but full of lice their houses frame of fine wood that drifts to their shore covered with walrus skins there is an inner apartment for sleeping made of the Elk skin which is close & tight with one or two lamps burning they will sleep 18 hours out of the 24 in winter they make all their journeys in winter & visiting parties in sleds drawn by dogs they are active healthy looking men & women very little sickness or disease amongst them they do not allow their sick to dye when they think them past recovery they strangle them & lay them in their burying place with all that belon to them they is a place in every settlement to lay their dead they do not bury but cut their robes open so the crows & vultures can devour them i believe their women are very virtuous & it is seldom they are known to transgres they have two & three wives them that are able to support them when they catch a walrus or seal or whale after thanking them as their they feed them & give them water to drink & heave water to the E. W. N & S. as an offering with a good deal of ceriminey
